From the Foreword
by former Surgeon General
C. Everett Koop, M.D., ScD

"With sophistication, wit, astute clinical observation, and a vibrant sense of compassion . . . this little book, in my opinion, is destined to fill a giant void in the training of all medical and nursing students, as well as becoming a classic read for experienced clinicians in search of the art of medicine. My advice is simple - read it."

Critical Acclaim for "Improving Medication Adherence: How to Talk with Patients About Their Medications" by Shawn Christopher Shea, M.D.

"No book provides better answers to the vexing problem of medication nonadherence. Laced with humor and compassion it is a fun book, a rare clinical gem, highly recommended . . . ."
George F. Cahill, Jr. M.D.
Professor of Medicine Emeritus, Harvard Medical School
Past President, American Diabetes Association

"Blissfully short, blessedly succinct - written with gimlet-eyed clarity and eloquence - this book is a boon for any clinician."
Mack Lipkin, M.D.
Founding President, American Academy on Physician and Patient

"This is a 'must' book for every clinician who wants to partner with patients regarding medications . . . . timely, useful, easy to read."
Michelle Riba, M.D.
Past President, American Psychiatric Association

"With a bright and refreshing writing style, packed with unusually insightful interviewing tips and laced with humor . . . . simply the best resource available on communicating with people about their medications"
Robert E. Drake, MD, PhD
Andrew Thomson Professor of Psychiatry, Dartmouth Medical School

"Extraordinarily useful book for physicians at the beginning of their careers . . . first-year and fourth-year students should have this as required reading . . . . It should then go on their bookshelf to be drawn upon throughout the rest of their careers."
Review from "Psychiatric Services" 2008

Sample chapter at www.medicationadherence.net (Published by Lippincott Williams & Wilkins)